

Why speak to OCD?

DMA Partnership LTD are involved in all areas of project management, quantity surveying and planning supervision for commercial and public sector organisations throughout the UK..

“We had been with the same company for 4 years and started to assess what we were getting for our money. Our provider never contacted us and their response times were slow, we needed to change to a company that lived up to its promises” comments Scott Aikman of DMA Partnership LTD,

“The team at OCD are friendly and professional. They simplify matters so you have a clear understanding of the situation.”

What value does OCD bring?

“OCD allow us to concentrate on the services that we offer without having to worry about whether or not our IT equipment and systems are operating properly – so we don’t waste time thinking about it now.”

“Given our previous experience with poor service, lack of contact, slow response times and not knowing whether or not an issue had actually been resolved, it was crucial that we selected the correct IT partner this time around” comments Scott Aikman.

“We took the time to understand the needs of DMA Partnership and the issues they had faced in the past. We worked together to find a support service which met their needs” adds Kevin Ashcroft of OCD.

The result...“OCD have been far better than any of our previous organisations. There is regular communication, even if it’s to let you know everything is working as it should. However, more importantly, on the odd occasion that something does go wrong, they are on the phone within minutes to let you know they are already looking in to the problem” comments Scott Aikman.

“OCD are professional, friendly and efficient. I would definitely recommend them to other organisations.”

The OCD effect

Scott Aikman comments “The difference proactive service makes is huge, we no longer worry or have to chase for answers on whether a fix has been carried out or indeed if work has even started on our call”.
